NEW RESEARCH: THE BIG QUESTIONS ON TEENS' MINDS

Ask a group of American teenagers what questions they feel pressure to figure out, and the answers aren't what you'd expect. Today's 13-18-year-olds aren't just wondering who to sit with at lunch or whether someone likes them back. They're wondering whether their generation will have a future, whether truth is knowable, whether anyone genuinely cares, whether God is real. Read Barna's report at news.uccsda.org/barnateens626
