HEALTH NUGGET: Wash Your Produce!
If the recent Cyclospora outbreak has you side-eyeing your salad, you’re not alone. The parasite spreads through contaminated fresh produce and has sickened thousands of people across multiple states since May of this year.

Symptoms are weeks of watery diarrhea, stomach cramps, nausea, fatigue, loss of appetite, and weight loss. Unfortunately, Cyclospora is notoriously difficult to wash off fresh produce. Unlike bacteria, it can cling stubbornly to leafy greens, herbs, berries, and other fruits and vegetables, making your usual rinse less effective than normal.

That doesn’t mean you should stop eating produce altogether but it does mean it’s worth taking a few extra precautions. “Washing can reduce risk, but it cannot guarantee that Cyclospora has been removed.”

Buying organic or local does not reduce the risk. The FDA explains that Cyclospora contamination occurs before produce reaches stores, typically through contaminated water or unsanitary conditions during growing and harvesting.

Take Away: Make sure you take your fruits and veggies to the produce wash. Give them a good rinse under clean filtered water before eating or preparing them-even if you plan to peel them.

You can use a vinegar and water solution, but it doesn’t guarantee it removes the parasites because they tend to cling. Cook it when you can. But if health officials identify a specific food or brand tied to the outbreak, don’t try to save it – throw it away.
