ADVENTIST LEADERS ASSESS DAMAGE, MOBILIZE RELIEF AFTER VENEZUELA EARTHQUAKE

Seventh-day Adventist leaders in Venezuela are working to account for church members and assess damage to churches after twin earthquakes measuring magnitudes 7.2 and 7.5 struck the country on June 24, toppling buildings, disrupting communications, and leaving at least 32 people dead, hundreds injured and missing.

The earthquakes, among the strongest recorded in Venezuela in more than a century, prompted a large-scale emergency response as rescue crews searched for survivors and officials worked to restore critical services and evaluate damage across several affected states.

Pastors and church leaders continue working to verify the condition of members while congregations throughout the region have already begun collecting food, drinking water, clothing, medicine, and other essential supplies for affected families.

As rescue and recovery efforts continue, church leaders said they remain committed to supporting affected communities through pastoral care, humanitarian assistance, and the hope found in Christ during the difficult days ahead.
