ANNOUNCEMENTS

Health Nugget

Gardening is more than a hobby—it benefits both body and mind. The physical activity, fresh air, and sunlight can improve cardiovascular health, reduce stress, and boost overall well-being. Interestingly, research suggests that exposure to a naturally occurring soil bacterium (Mycobacterium vaccae) can stimulate serotonin release. Serotonin is so strongly linked to improved mood that one of the leading classes of prescription antidepressants specifically work to increase serotonin levels. This powerful combination of increased serotonin, physical activity, sunlight exposure, and time in nature make gardening an exceptional resource for supporting mental health.
